Listening to the landscape

- Healing the land, healing ourselves

Margaret Colquehoun describes her and her colleagues' 14 years work to develop the land around Pishwanton Wood in southeast Scotland to construct buildings and a community based on the principles of Goethean/Steiner science.

- Building for the Sun

Richard Hobday examines how the ancients' use of sunlight in buildings was re-discovered in architectural movements in the '30s, used in treating TB and is being increasingly recognized in designing modern buildings.

- Vitamin D update and hazards of sun screens

Simon Best describes the latest research on benefits of vitamin D – generated by sunlight – and the hazardous substances in most commercial sun screens.

- Re-discovering the art and science of sound healing

John Reid and Annaliese Kohinoor illustrate how sound therapy, first used by the ancients, is now poised to reveal the intricacies of healing both at the cellular and psychological levels.

- Reclaiming the Sacred Feminine

Margaret Starbird recounts the history and myths around the theme of the sacred feminine featuring Mary Magdalene's relationship with Christ, its suppression by the Church and re-emergence via the unfolding saga of the Knights Templar and imagery in Rosslyn Chapel and elsewhere.

- Climate change – accepting an inconvenient truth

Felix Padel reports on the issues raised at a major London conference, the pressing time-frame to achieve CO2 reductions and the pros and cons of biofuels.

Sound: Featuring the recently decoded Rosslyn Motet, deciphered after 15 years from the cymatic images carved in stone in Rosslyn Chapel and recorded there.
